Who is the ideal client for this look?

The ideal client for a golden blonde with shadow root hair color would typically be someone with a warm skin tone and light to medium natural hair color. This combination helps create a harmonious and natural look, enhancing the overall appearance of the hair.

How long does this look take and how is it priced?

The time it takes to achieve a golden blonde with shadow root hair color can vary depending on factors such as the starting hair color, hair length, and the stylist's experience. On average, it might take around 2 to 4 hours for the entire process, including the color application and processing time.

As for pricing, it also varies based on factors like salon location, stylist expertise, and the products used. Generally, this type of coloring could be priced as a combination of the base color, highlights, and shadow root application. It's best to consult with a salon or stylist for an accurate quote based on your specific hair and desired outcome.

What is the maintenance schedule of this look?

- Color Refresh: Depending on how quickly your hair grows and the contrast between your natural hair color and the shadow root, you might need a color touch-up every 4 to 6 weeks.
- Toning: Blondes can sometimes develop unwanted brassy or yellow tones over time. Using a purple shampoo and conditioner can help counteract these tones and keep your color looking fresh.
- Root Maintenance: The shadow root effect creates a soft transition between the natural hair color and the blonde. As your roots grow, this transition remains natural-looking. However, if the contrast becomes too noticeable, a touch-up might be needed.
